launch was not far from Keeport when Melfors struck a light and the head tem of the boat. The blaning particle fell caked from the engine and in a few seconds the bottom of the boat was on fire.

All the members of the party scooped up water with their hate in their efforts to put in the five, but they could make no impresand on the flames, which opresd with great captelity. The blaze was surrounding the ene lone tank when the young men decided to everture the boat to avoid an explosion. As the boys went into the water Olsen disappeared at once and was not seen again.

McHose clung to the side of the boat as long as he could and then let go, crying out to Robedee to help him as he drifted away.

Robedee swam after McHose and while trying to keep him aftoat Robedee was seized by the throat and finally dragged under the surface. Robedee struggled to free himself and finally came up on the epposite side of the overturned launch. One of the boys pushed the blade of an our toward him and he was pulled to the boat.

while the other five young men were barely keeping their hold on the boat on account of the cold a heavy wave struck the launch and wrenched it from their grasp, leaving them struggling, with the boat lost to them in the darkness. Robedee, Macan and Hornsby swam in the direction they thought the launch took, and finally found it and managed to get a better hold than before. Barter and Wicksburg evidently swam in the wrong direction, for nothing more was seen of them.

As the launch drifted the three boys shouted for help. Finally they approached the Red Bank light and saw the lights of a steamer in the distance. They redoubled their cries, and as the steamer came alongside they were heard. The steamer was the freighter St. Michael, bound from New York for Keyport. Although the launch couldn't be seen from the steamer a boat was lowered. The three benumbed survivors were finally found and put aboard the St. Michael.

The three boys were taken to the Pavilion Hotel at Keyport and put to bed. All were suffering from exposure, while Macan was badly burned in fighting the fre.

ACCUSE THE "MAGIC BOOTS" MAN Of Holding and Treating Dr. Clark W Dunlap for Inmittable Ends.

Another case involving the "magic boots" of Matthew Hilgert, who runs what he calls sanitarium at 31 West Twenty-sixth street, came up in the Supreme Court'yester. day, when Gertrude Dunlop Hawes and a number of other Dunlops applied to Justice McCall for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the sanity of their sixty-three-year-old relative, Dr. Clark W. Dunlop, a retired physician.

Gilbert Ray Hawes, husband and counsel of Mrs. Hawes, told Justice McCall that he and his wife had received information that Dr. Dunlop, who, it is said is worth close on $1,000,000, was being treated for paralysis by Hilgert in the sanitarium. The treatment Mr. Hawes said, consisted of making the doctor, whose mental faculties are said to have disappeared almost entirely, wear a pair of the famous magic boots, and go through a course of electric therapeutics. Mrs. Hawes got her information through an anonymous letter, which declared that Hilgert had got the doctor to sign a will. Following up this letter, Mrs. Hawes found that Dr. Dunlop and his wife, Elizabeth, were at Hilgert's place.

Mrs. Dunlop resented strongly what she called the invasion of her privacy by Dr. Dunlop's niece. Later Hawes and his wife saw Hilgert, who told them bluntly that he was not worried about the case of Dr. Dunlop except that he thought the physician might improve under the magic boot treatment. Mr. Hawes averred that he was convinced that Hilgert has a plan on foot to marry Mrs. Dunlop after Dr. Dunlop is ment Mr. Hawes said, consisted of making dead and that the will, said to be executed gives everything to Mrs. Dunlop.

Nurses and others who are said to have had charge of Dunlop are quoted by Mrs. Hawes to the effect that the physician is quite helpless and that his name has been traced, by direction of Mrs. Dunlop, to various checks. His helplessness is described by these nurses as piteous. It is related that he often cries like a child and begs to be taken home.

Annie Tisdall, a nurse, declared that she was convinced that there was a fraudulent.

Annie Tisdail. a nurse, declared that she was convinced that there was a fraudulent scheme afoot to deprive Dunlop of his property or so assure it to Mrs. Dunlop that Hilgert would be sure to enjoy the benefit of Dr. Dunlop's money at his death. Mrs. Tisdail says that Hilgert offered to pay her a largely increased salary if she would stay and keep her eves shut to what was going on.

Ex-Judge Clinch appeared to oppose the application for a commission. Mr. Clinch said that he represented Mrs. Dunlop and that he would be able to show that many of the statements made by Mr. Hawes were based merely on information, and not on personal knowledge. Mr. Clinch said that Dr. Dunlop's health was bad, but improving, and that Hilgert was not treating him at all.

Justice McCall remarked that he thought an examination of Dr. Dunlop by a qualified physician would be the most satisfactory outcome, but that he would not take such a course until he was convinced that Dr. Dunlop was in a condition to stand such an examination. Mr. Hawes said that his information was that the doctor was in such a bad way that he might die at any moment. Justice McCall then reserved decision.

700 FRANTIC PASSENGERS FIGHT FOR THE GITLIA'S BOATS

While the Crew Fight the Flames in the Hold and the Ship Fights a Southwest Gale—It was a Tweive Hour Job to Put Out the Fire-Then the Wind Dropped.

The Austrian steamship Giulia came into port yesterday with 763 passengers, nearly all in the steerage, a cargo of grapes and figs. a crew of eighty men and an experience which Capt. Cherubin save he never wants over again. The Giulia was on fire eight days out from Gibraltar and from 5:30 o'clock in the morning until after 5 in the afternoon the crew were fighting the flames. the ship was fighting a gale and high head seas and the passengers were fighting for the sengers from their berths. Some had partly dressed, others were in their night-clothes. Women caught up their children and made for the deck. Men fought to get to what they thought would be the safest places. The scare soon got aft and soon the 700 odd passengers were on deck. Some prayed. Others rushed to the boats and in a twinkling had ripped off the canvas covers and crowded into the craft. There were twelve boats and as soon as these were crowded those who could not get in fought for the life rafts.

The Giulia left Trieste on September 14. was blowing a whole gale from the southwest. Seas often broke on board, but the Giulia is so arranged that the water runs off and does little damage.

The crew had little time to give to the passengers. The officers tried to assure them that there was no danger, but soon concluded that while the passengers were on deck fighting each other they were out of the way of the men fighting the flames, and so left them there with just sufficient guard to keep them from attempting to launch the boats. The main deck hatches were soon removed and water was pumped into the hold in volume. When the flames were somewhat subdued sailors entered the hold and fought them. At times the fire threatened to drive them out, but they sturdly held their posts. It took twelve hours to conquer the flames and then there was about six feet of water in the hold and the vessel was rolling badly in the high seas. Tackle was rigged on the foremast and barrel after barrel of cargo was hoisted and dumped overboard. In all 1,500 barrels were turned loose on the Atlantic.

All this time the passengers bad hung

All this time the passengers had hung on to their places in the boats as if they were tickets to Paradise. The passengers were wet and cold. Few had anything to eat. Some few had joined with the sailors in fighting the flames.

All night Capt. Cherubin kept a watch in the hold in case the fire should start again, and next day the water was pumped out. The storm then abated.

The vessel is not much damaged. The fire seemed to have confined itself to the cargo, and how it started is a mystery to all. The Giulia is owned by the Unione Navigation Company of Trieste.
